PRESENTER:

James Hagy, Distinguished Lecturer in Residence at Loyola University Chicago School of Law

More than ever, business clients and their advisors are afforded the opportunity—and the challenge—of becoming involved in transactions in markets abroad. What is the role of the U.S. transactional lawyer when working on projects in other countries? How can the coordinating lawyer contribute most effectively to international transactions, those sited in other countries, and those involving multinational participants sited in New York City?
